INTRODUCTION

Earl Fankhauser was my wife's grandfather. Sadly, I never got a chance to meet him. I had only known my wife for a short time when Earl died. It was about two years later I discovered the extent of his work with encased coins.

We were at a coin show in Connecticut when my wife saw one of Earl's pieces in a dealer's case and pointed it out to me. I asked the fellow what he could tell me about it. "It's a Fankhauser piece," he said, and proceeded to bring out numerous other examples of different encased coins Earl had sold. I was astonished! Seeing so many different pieces, and the thought of a stranger half way across the country from Indiana knowing the name of my wife's grandfather, it really shocked me.

Driven by my fascination with both coins and family history, the last six years have brought me many hours of enjoyment -- making new discoveries, making new friends, and getting to know my wife's extended family. It is my hope to share a sense of the man behind this vast volume of work, and to provide collectors with a workable framework for organizing and assessing their collections.

It has been a lot of fun searching for and collecting Earl's pieces. There are not many opportunities to forge new ground like this in regular numismatics. I have enjoyed the thrill of the hunt and the excitement of new finds. There are more undiscovered pieces out there!

I would like to thank the many people who helped make this work possible by giving of their time and sharing their memories. Most especially I would like to thank George Courtesis, who spent untold hours in the Allen County Public Library attributing "maverick" pieces and digging up background stories. George's enthusiasm, feedback, and friendly prodding were instrumental in providing motivation to keep me going, and for encouraging me to keep improving the Catalog.

I would like to recognize Bruce Smith, who began researching Earl's pieces back in 1985. Bruce provided some key contacts in the early stages. David Schenkman, editor of the TAMS Journal, encouraged me to take on the project when I was first contemplating it, and gave initial direction on how to set up the Catalog. David also photographed most of the pieces pictured herein. Jim Hemphill provided my first list of collector contacts and introduced me to the various exonumia publications available. David Blumenfeld, Marketing Manager at the Osborne Coinage Company, searched Osborne's archives and found two dies that survived. Cliff Stegman, ex-president of Osborne, provided detailed information on the manufacturing process and the evolution of the encased coin business at Osborne. Linda Wight Harmon helped greatly with style and content to improve the readability.

I would also like to thank the following people who contributed in various ways: Norman Alligood, Joel Anderson, Herman Aqua, L.D. Beaver, Rich Bottles Jr., Paul Cunningham, Robert Doyle, Jim Fairfield Sr., George Fitzgerald, Peter Fuhrman, Richard Gaetano, John Genualdi, Cindy Grellman, Ken Hallenbeck, Jim Hartman, Michael Hawfield, Alan Herbert, Rodger Hershey, Myron Huffman, Allen Karn, Jay Kipfer, Ray Lefman, Marv Mericle, Cliff Mishler, Dean Montour, Jack Paul, Mike Pfefferkorn, Dave Rasor, Joel J. Reznick, Harvey Rose, Graves Rouse, Steve Saller, Howard Sharkey, Arlie Slabaugh, Les LeRoy Smith, Neil Sowards, Barry Uman, Arvid Wallin, Tom Welch, and the numerous members of Earl's extended family.

Finally, I would like to thank my wife for her patience and support. Earl had a wonderful granddaughter!

Upon publication of this Catalog, additional pieces will likely surface. So all may benefit, please send an enlarged photocopy of both sides of the piece to the author. Updates will be submitted periodically to the TAMS Journal.

FREDERICK EARL FANKHAUSER

"THE PENNY MAN"

HIS LIFE AND WORK WITH ENCASED COINS

One warm mid-west summer day in 1965, a stern-looking but kind-hearted grandfather threw several hundred pennies out onto the lawn. The air was full of excitement as his grandchildren impatiently awaited his signal. With an intent look betrayed only by the gleam in his eye he shouted "Go!" and the yard was full of screams and giggles.

On this particular day in Fort Wayne, Indiana, a blond-haired seven-year-old girl found twelve shiny pennies. Thrilled with what she had gathered, she ran off to a nearby tree to count them. That little girl is now my wife. Her grandfather was Earl Fankhauser, "The Penny Man," whose prolific work in the 1950s and 1960s with encased coins made his name almost synonymous with encased coins of that period. This story traces his life and passion for selling encased coins.

Two "your man" pieces, IN-GAR-CA-10 and IN-LAO-TA-10.

If you hunt you can still find them at antique shows and flea markets. You probably remember seeing them from various businesses in your home town when you were a kid. Encased cents, or as many people call them, "lucky pennies," are a reflection of the past.

Each encased coin conveys a sense of the era in which it was made. Five and six digit phone numbers bring to mind a time when all out-of-town calls went through an operator. Pieces advertising "Your Milk Man" and "Your Double Cola Man" reflect a period when home deliveries were common, along with corner mom-and-pop grocery stores. It seemed as though everyone knew each other in town.

Today there are many myths about Earl and his "lucky pennies," but little is known about him outside Fort Wayne, Indiana, where he lived his entire life. To those who lived with him, Earl was just an ordinary sort of fellow -- with a few eccentricities. To those who only know of him through collecting his pieces, he is a bit of a mystery.

Who was this fellow whose name appears on so many different encased coins? What was he like? What drove him to do it? And how were his pieces made? These are but a few of the questions explored here, beginning with the arrival of the first Fankhausers in the United States.

THE FANKHAUSERS ARRIVE

Earl's grandfather, Andreas Fankhauser, left Buchwald, Germany, to seek his fortune in Australia's gold rush. Not having any luck there, he moved on to the United States in 1888. Eventually he made his way to Fort Wayne, a city rich in history dating back to the frontier days.

Fort Wayne was named for the fort built there in 1794 by General "Mad" Anthony Wayne to fend off the Indians. It is known as the "Summit City" because it is situated on a divide. The rivers on the east flow to Lake Erie, and just nine miles west the Little Wabash River leads to the Mississippi. Fort Wayne quickly became an important center for fur trade, because of the short portage for travelers going from Quebec to New Orleans.

From 1832 to 1882 the town's character began to change due to the construction of the Wabash and Erie Canal. The massive project attracted large numbers of German and Irish immigrants. By the time Earl's grandfather arrived, the town was nearly 80% German. It is not hard to see why at that time Fort Wayne was known as "a most German town."

A statue of General "Mad" Anthony Wayne.

Earl's grandfather liked Fort Wayne so well that he sent for his family. His wife, Sara Wegscheider, and their youngest son, Paul Frederick "Fritz" Emil Fankhauser, arrived in the United States in 1889. Sadly, within a year of their arrival Andreas died, leaving Sara and Fritz alone in a new country, neither one able to speak English.

Neighbors gave them milk occasionally, and they gathered coal from the railroad tracks to heat their home. They owned half a dozen chickens and two roosters and they grew their own food. For several years they practically begged their existence.

At age thirteen Fritz quit school and got a job carrying ice for a grocery store to support his mother. Later in life he blamed his poor health and arthritis on the years he spent hauling ice. In June of 1901 Fritz married Margaret "Maggie" Holland and on 5 April 1902 they had their first child, Frederick Earl Fankhauser, "The Penny Man." After Earl came a girl and three other boys.

In 1907 Earl's father took a job repairing railroad cars for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. This lasted fifteen years until there was a general strike in 1922, and Fritz was never recalled to work. Shortly thereafter Earl's mother developed cancer. She passed away in 1927, when Earl was just twenty-five.

Even though Earl's father never finished school, he managed to teach himself to read and write English. He enjoyed reading, but he liked liquor better, especially in later years when his arthritis got bad.

HARD BEGINNINGS

Earl grew up poor and lived much of his life that way. Like his father, Fritz, he never finished high school, quitting after the eighth grade. He preferred to fish and spend time with friends.

Earl Fankhauser at about eleven years old.

For a while Earl took a job in a machine shop as an apprentice. Later he went to work for Pennell Auto Company, repairing Fords and earning $15 per week. Throughout his life Earl loved cars, especially Fords. He was a Ford man.

Later Earl transferred to Shaffer Auto Company and then started up a garage with a friend. Soon it became apparent their business was making too little money to support both men, so Earl sold his share. He worked for a Cadillac dealer for a while, and then went back to Pennell Auto, this time as a salesman. He sold used and then new cars for Pennell from 1922 to 1924, at age twenty-one to twenty-three.

About this time Earl became interested in coins, primarily pennies. As treasurer for Centennial Methodist Church, he counted the coins in the collection plates on Sundays. Whenever he saw an Indian head cent in the plate, he swapped it for a new one.

While working at Pennell Auto Earl met Audrie Dessie Coomer, a farm girl from Payne, Ohio. Audrie had come to Fort Wayne to study secretarial skills at the International Business College. In 1924 cars were very much the rage, and not everyone had one. Audrie was swept off her feet by young, attractive Earl, who not only had his own car, but also sold them for a living. To a farm girl, that was mighty impressive!

Audrie discovered early on about Earl's love for practical jokes. She and a few friends were out for a ride in the country with Earl one day when his car appeared to develop engine trouble. Earl persuaded the young women to get out and push. After a good shove, the engine began to run just fine and Earl rode off without them.

After a brief engagement, Earl and Audrie were married on 17 June 1924. They had a simple wedding in Earl's parent's home.

In 1925 Earl left Pennell to start a used car business with another friend. It only lasted a few years. Earl's partner left early to start up a tire dealership. Then a new Ford dealership moved into the building next door. Finally the Great Depression hit, and Earl eventually had to close down.

In 1926 Earl and Audrie's first child, Frederick Earl "Junior" was born. A year later the child developed a severe case of diarrhea from some spoiled corn stored too long in the family's ice box. Unable to stop the diarrhea, "Junior" died during the summer of 1927.

The 1930s brought three healthy children to Earl and Audrie. Yet, the decade was an extremely difficult period for the young family. They lost most of their money through various failed business attempts. Without a steady source of income, Earl eventually moved his family in with his father and his sister, Lucille.

On a calendar, Earl and Audrie recorded his weekly earnings, often just a quarter one week and fifty cents the next. Even though his family was desperate, Earl would not let Audrie get any welfare help. Nor would he accept a job with the WPA. Because of his proud German heritage, he refused to take a handout.

In 1936 the local schools had a program to aid malnourished children hit hardest by the depression. A limited number were sent to camp where they received food and medical attention. Earl's children were all so thin that the two who were old enough to be in school were both selected. Afterward Earl and Audrie sent their children to Audrie's parent's farm in Ohio, where at least they would have adequate food.

In Fort Wayne, businesses were closing everywhere. With so many businesses failing, insurance companies were canceling the fire insurance on any building left vacant more than six months. Landlords were glad to have any kind of tenant just to hold onto their properties.

In this environment Earl found someone willing to let him have a storefront on Harrison Street for a percentage of his earnings. For a year or so Earl sold furniture and antiques there. With a sign in the window he also advertised "OLD COINS BOUGHT AND SOLD."

At that time there were no coin dealers in Fort Wayne. People were more than willing to sell their old coins and bills for anything above face value, and Earl picked up many bargains. But with the hard times, he could not afford to keep them.

Even after Earl closed his antique store he continued selling antiques from his home, from where he conducted shows periodically. His dining room was so full of antiques and breakables there was hardly enough room to walk through it. It made living there difficult for everyone.

Earl especially liked crystal, glassware, and marble top furniture. He was known for his fine pieces of carnival glass. Earl knew what things were worth and was willing to wait for top dollar. This persistent trait kept him from doing much business.

He also stored a lot of things in his garage. When the roof developed a leak, he never bothered to fix it. At one point, hundreds of cylinder records and a few players were ruined. Earl was not a handyman. He lost a lot of things that way.

To save money during this time, Earl got into the habit of not heating his home. For years the family lived with only a minimal amount of heat. One of the children remembers bringing a pan of hot water upstairs to their bedroom one night and finding it completely frozen in the morning.

Their last child, Daniel Coomer Fankhauser, was born in 1940. Tragedy struck Earl's family again in the winter of 1943 when Danny came down with the whooping cough, which later developed into pneumonia. At that time there was a shortage of doctors due to World War II. Earl and Audrie called the same doctor who delivered their other children years earlier. The doctor was retired and had not kept up with his profession. He failed to prescribe penicillin for Danny. By the time the family called someone else, it was too late. Danny died at home in January of 1944.

The Fankhauser family (clockwise: Earl, Audrie, Daniel, Donald, Donna and Dorothy) in about 1942.

The family did not finish paying for Danny's birth until after he died. Many times they could not keep up with their bills, but they always paid them eventually.

In 1942, Earl got a job working for Wayne Pump Company, and for the first time his family had a steady source of income. As a general laborer Earl unloaded presses, stacked parts, and did light assembly work. The pay was good at $50 per week, but he hated being in the factory. Earl preferred selling and making deals.

As a result, Earl led a sort of double life. He worked in the factory during the day, and then at night he would go out wheeling and dealing. Deal making consumed essentially all of his free time.

He would get home from work, dress up, and within an hour be on a bus headed for downtown. He would leave between 3:30 and 4:00 and return by 8:30 or 9:00, unless it was lodge meeting night. Then it would be 9:30. Earl attended lodge meetings faithfully, and worked his way up to the 32nd degree in the Masons.

Those who only saw him after work may have had the impression he was a bachelor banker or a businessman. He was not proud of his job in the factory and never discussed his private life with anyone. Whenever he was out selling,

Earl always dressed well and kept a neat appearance. He usually wore a blue suit, which accented his bright blue eyes. He was a fairly large man, and by the mid-1940s a little overweight and balding.

The Fankhauser's home from 1945 to 1959, at 2407 Euclid Avenue.

Once Earl took up selling something, he never really stopped. He just added it to his repertoire. Eventually he was involved in selling just about anything and everything, besides doing his regular job at Wayne Pump. He was copying photographs, selling insurance, needles, cars, real estate, antiques, coins, stamps, and eventually encased coins too.

ENCASED COIN DAYS

Encased coins were "invented" near the turn of the century after the discovery of aluminum. Aluminum was the perfect metal for encasing coins since it was inexpensive, strong, and could be formed easily in a coining press.

Encased coins were an inexpensive form of advertising. They were very popular with small businesses. Some people used them as calling cards. Others were made up as souvenirs or to commemorate an event.

The popularity of encased coins grew throughout the first part of the twentieth century. But once World War II began, the private coining industry stopped production to support the conservation of metals for the war effort. After the war ended, they resumed.

Encased coins were marketed primarily through traveling salesmen who sold various advertising novelties from catalogs. Encased coin manufacturers bought advertising space in these catalogs. Salesmen ordered the custom-made pieces directly from the manufacturer.

The sales pitch went something like this: "People don't throw away money, so they will keep your advertising piece. With the horseshoe and good luck wording on the back, people will carry your piece in their pocket as a good luck charm, and they will have a constant reminder of you. Encased coins are made of metal, so they will last a long time. You can even have them made up as key rings if you wish."

The first two encased coins Earl Fankhauser had made for himself, IN-FWA-FA-20 and -22.

We may never know exactly how Earl first got started selling encased coins. Perhaps he saw one at a coin show and became interested, or maybe he met one of those salesmen. However it happened, in 1948 Earl began his adventure. In that year he had two pieces made for himself, and began taking orders for others from various businesses around town.

Earl started out slowly at first, but before long he was selling far more encased coins than anyone else in the country. He took the concept to new heights. Unlike other novelty salesmen, encased coins were the only advertising pieces Earl sold.

Selling encased coins was a labor of love for Earl. It matched his personality and life-style perfectly. It allowed him to work with coins and to keep a hand in doing what he enjoyed most, selling things and making deals with people. Always looking to draw attention to himself, it gave him a sort of notoriety about town. He was "The Penny Man."

Earl was prolific. Over a span of eighteen years he took orders for more than 670 different encased coins, most of which he had his name added to at the bottom. His work spanned 29 states and the District of Columbia, plus Ontario and Quebec, covering 134 towns and cities. He sold them to car dealers, barber shops, political candidates, shoe stores -- anyone who would listen. The table below shows how many different kinds of encased coins Earl had made each year, based upon the date of the coin inside.

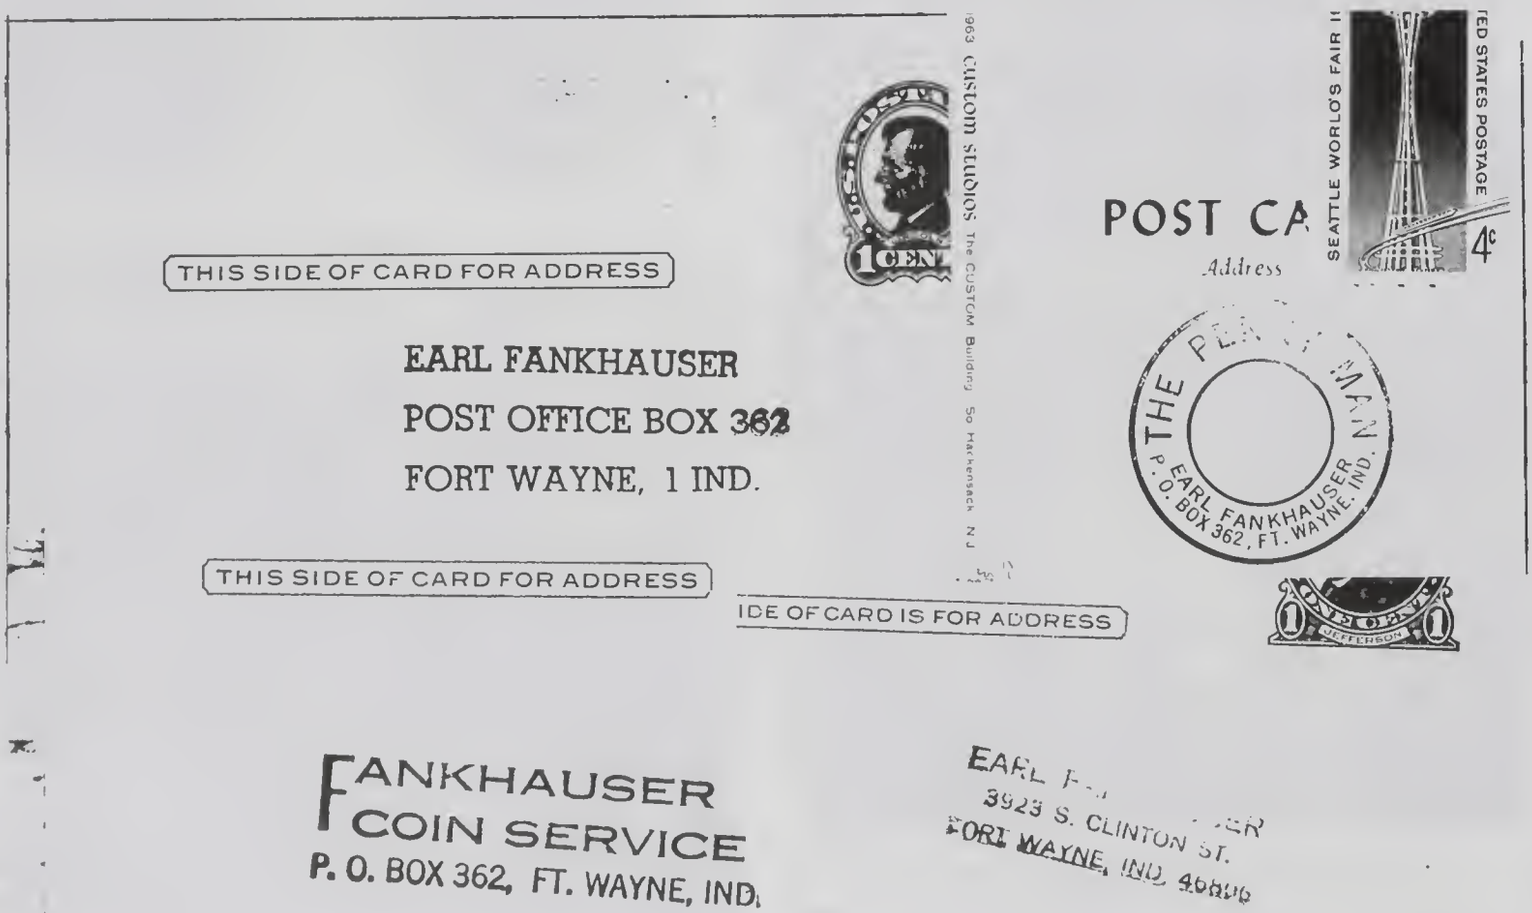
For Earl's family, trips around town with Earl were always more lengthy than they otherwise would have been. Whenever they were out, Earl would interject, "Stop here a minute -- I need to go see a man." He was making contacts all the time.

While not everyone appreciated Earl's attempts to sell to them, most say he was "medium pushy" in a friendly sort of way, and never rude. He used a standard manila order pad with numbered sheets and carbon paper you moved forward each time. He would walk up with his order pad in hand and start talking, and sometimes might even begin writing. He would point out how a person like you really should have their own personal encased coin, and then ask how many it was you wanted. If you declined he would act surprised, but would not push the issue.

If you did order, Earl required payment in advance. He typically charged $12.00 for 100 pieces, and extra if you wanted something other than a cent in the middle. It was also more if you wanted a horseshoe shape or a large round encasement, or if you wanted your pieces punched as a key chain. Most customers just ordered the standard 32 millimeter round piece with a cent inside. The table on the following page lists the number of special orders Earl took.



A few of the post cards Earl Fankhauser used to pass out to encourage re-ordering.

Earl used to pass out post cards with his name and address on them. Whenever he saw an old customer he would ask if they needed any more "lucky coins," as he called them, and hand them a post card to reorder with. He often sold encased coins in exchange for goods or services. If he couldn't get cash, he bartered for shoes for the family, eyeglasses, haircuts -- whatever he could get to make a sale.

Throughout the years Earl had a number of pieces made for himself with his name on them, which he passed out freely. He often left encased coins as tips at restaurants and gave them to prospective customers to stimulate their interest. He especially liked giving them to children.

Fankhauser's solid aluminum personal pieces.

His personal pieces did not always advertise his business. In fact, three of them were not encased coins at all, but rather solid aluminum pieces. Two personal pieces wished friends the season's greetings. Another wished sick friends a speedy recovery.

One of Fankhauser's counterstamped cents.

Earl had another way of creating calling cards for himself. Occasionally he "personalized" coins directly, counterstamping his initials "FEF" into cents.

Pennies were always a part of family gatherings whenever "The Penny Man" was there. The grandchildren could count on getting some encased cents from Grandpa. They all loved getting them, but found the pennies awfully difficult to break out! (Of course, they never let Grandpa know.)

At family reunions, cousins remember hunting for snails along the riverbank at Earl's prodding. They would bring them back to Earl and exchange them for encased cents. He also liked giving away plain pennies at family outings. His penny hunts on the lawn were always a big hit. The child who found the most usually won a whole roll of pennies.

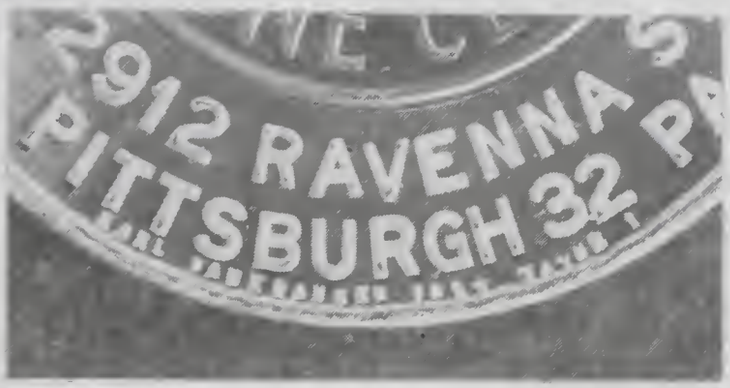
Earl picked up new pennies in bulk directly from the bank. After holding onto them for a few years, he took out ads in Coin World newspaper and sold them by the roll, usually at a huge mark-up. He liked selling pennies because even if he got just two cents each for them, he would double his money.

Earl had another, more personal reason for liking pennies. They had Abraham Lincoln's likeness on them. Earl had a life-long fascination with Abraham Lincoln, and thought of Lincoln as his role model.

Throughout his life Earl collected books on Lincoln. He lived just blocks away from the largest private collection of Lincoln memorabilia in the world, at the Lincoln National Life Insurance Company. He planned vacations around visiting various Lincoln historical sites across the country. Earl's grandchildren remember being rewarded for reading books on Lincoln and memorizing portions of speeches and various facts about Lincoln's life. It was only natural for Earl to take a strong liking to Lincoln cents.

IN-FWA-GA-30, showing an early form of Fankhauser's "signature," with his initials "F.E.F." right in the inscription.

In 1953 or 1954, Earl came up with the idea of signing each encased coin he sold. He started by putting his initials "F.E.F." right in the inscription. They appear on just six pieces (IN-FWA-GA-30, -HA-30, -HU-10, -MA-90 and -92, and -WE-10).



An enlargement of Fankhauser's "signature."

Soon afterward, he started putting his full name and address at the bottom in tiny letters. Earl was unique in this regard. No other encased coin salesman "signed" the pieces he sold. As a result, Earl's name is well known today among collectors throughout the United States and Europe.

An enlargement of the Stork Club piece, made by the Osborne Coinage Company.

Earl might have gotten the idea from an encased coin he had in his collection. It was made by the Osborne Coinage Company for the Stork Club in New York City. The encasement is brass, and along the bottom edge it says: "OSBORNE COINAGE CIN. O." in the same tiny letters Earl used.

Since Earl was a very private individual, many things will never be known about him. Perhaps his most closely guarded secret was where his encased coins were made. Theories abound on the subject. Most collectors believe Earl had his own press and made them himself. Others believe he teamed up with a local tool and die maker. It is said (incorrectly) that Earl and his partner also made Fort Wayne's bus tokens. People closest to Earl believe he ordered them from a company in Chicago.

A Fort Wayne bus token.

Earl probably started many of these rumors himself. He didn't want any competition, and he didn't want his customers going directly to his source of supply. Even his own son never was able to get a straight answer from Earl about where he got them from.

It was the Stork Club piece with the small lettering at the bottom that provided the clue. Upon contacting the Osborne Coinage Company, they acknowledged they had been Earl's source of supply. Unfortunately, two years before the author made this discovery, Osborne threw away all their dies and records on encased coins. This is especially sad, since Osborne would have had a complete record of every piece Earl ordered and information on how many of each were produced.

A search of the Osborne facility in 1990 uncovered two dies made for Earl that escaped their clean-up, apparently because the dies were for his solid aluminum pieces, rather than encased coins. Earl's "signature" can be seen stamped into the TOKENS AND MEDALLIONS die, just as it must have appeared on the encased coin dies.

A die from the Osborne Coinage Company, made for Earl Fankhauser.

By Osborne's standards, the encased coin business involved a lot of customers for little money. Making the dies required skilled engravers. It was tough to keep the price low enough on "small" quantities. Encased coins were only a minor part of their business. Osborne began making encased coins before World War II and stopped four or five years after Earl quit selling them. Osborne must have felt the loss of Earl's business, since Earl had been giving them nearly two orders a week at the time he quit!

Osborne marketed their encased coins through the Advertising Specialty Group, which published a three inch thick catalog of advertising novelties, including matches, pens, calendars, inexpensive imprinted items, and printed material. Along with the catalog, the Advertising Specialty Group also put on one or two shows per year.

Due to the vast number of pieces Earl had made with his name on them in the 1950s and 1960s, some collectors mistakenly call all encased coins made by Osborne during that era "Fankhauser pieces." They say Earl's pieces have a certain look about them, not knowing that Earl's source also made encased coins for many other salesmen.

A SLICE OF LIFE

Earl was the fastest walker you ever saw. But when it came to driving, you would not want to be behind him in traffic. He knew the timing of every traffic light in town and would often shift into neutral and coast, however slowly it took to hit the next light just as it turned green. When parking, he enjoyed turning the ignition switch off as far away as possible and gliding into his spot. He hated to use his brakes. He believed good drivers didn't use their brakes, because it wasted gas and wore out the pads.

He was frugal about small things. He never let the water run. He was fanatical about turning off the lights whenever he left a room. Years of barely scraping by had made Earl mindful of how to conserve.

In spite of his many tight-fisted habits, Earl was generous to friends and strangers. Visitors to his home were treated like royalty. They found it difficult to leave without having something to eat. Typically they would be offered a 7UP float and then Earl would break out the candy. He had an insatiable sweet tooth. He especially enjoyed taking people out for a malt, a treat he consumed quite often himself.

Sometimes Earl's hospitality was overcome by his mischievous side. His son-in-law recalls visiting Earl with a friend from college. Earl offered them some pop, and they both accepted. Every time his friend's glass was nearly empty, Earl refilled it. As his friend began to squirm, Earl remarked, "I thought you were thirsty?" Pretty soon everyone caught on, and by the end of the afternoon his friend had finished nearly a case of eight ounce bottles.

Earl loved spicy food. His pork chop sandwiches were famous. In his backyard was a large iron kettle in which he stewed ribs and pork chops for days, soaking them in a mixture of red pepper and tobasco sauce. He liked to see how hot he could get them. The family actually became used to eating them that way, but friends would take one bite and run for something to drink. Even the family, though they loved them, could only tolerate one or two bites at a time.

Earl loved offering his spicy pork chop sandwiches to unsuspecting people. Then he would try badgering them into eating two or more if he could. During one such episode Earl spied a friend who, when he thought no one was looking, wrapped his pork chop sandwich in a napkin and tucked it into his pocket. Earl noticed of course, and asked, "Gee, didn't you like that sandwich?" Embarrassed, his friend replied, "No, I'm just saving it for later."

Earl was very proud of his gardening skills. Every year he had to have the first ripe tomato in the neighborhood, and usually did. He would start a plant early in his house in a pot, and set it outside whenever a warm day came along.

He kept a huge garden, covering two full building lots. It never had any weeds, because he worked his son to death in it. He was also very particular about keeping his yard looking sharp all the time.

One year he planted a large amount of cabbage that he hoped to give away. It came up unusually well, and Earl boasted of his success to everyone. But as the cabbage matured, it started to look funny. It turned out not to be cabbage at all; he had planted kohlrabi. That summer, all his friends had a good laugh and plenty of kohlrabi.

XX-ANY-GO-10 and XX-ANY-ME-10.

Earl and Audrie were faithful members of the First Wayne Street United Methodist Church. Their faith was very important to them, and most especially to Audrie. They sat up front every Sunday, where Earl would sometimes nod off during the sermon. Earl's habit of relaxing in church carried over to the rest of the Lord's day as well. Earl was rather strict about making everyone in his family rest on Sundays.

Earl and Audrie enjoyed finding bargains and giving things away. They often went to the neighborhood A&P grocery store late on Saturday night and bought up any expiring bread available. They liked sharing with numerous shut-ins, whom they visited regularly.

The Fankhausers only lived a few blocks away from the A&P. Whenever the A&P hired a new carry-out boy, Earl would try to get him to carry his groceries all the way home. He would keep telling the boy his house was only just a little bit ahead, until they got all the way there.

Earl loved to play pinochle, and pinochle only -- men versus women. He used to say he would go on to another game after he learned to how play that one well. He played a really wild, double-deck version involving swapping four cards with your partner, with all sorts of creative signals during the bidding about which cards to pass, what suit to bid in, and how high. Picking up tricks was secondary to making all the meld points. He and his partner bid so high they almost always won the bid, and then got a double pinochle or a double run.

Earl had post office box number 362 in Fort Wayne ever since he started dealing in coins. He shared it for a time with Arthur Magner, a friend who worked at the post office. Earl used to spend a lot of time there, buying stamps and making friends with the postal workers.

IN-FWA-MA-52, with the same P.O. box number as Earl Fankhauser's.

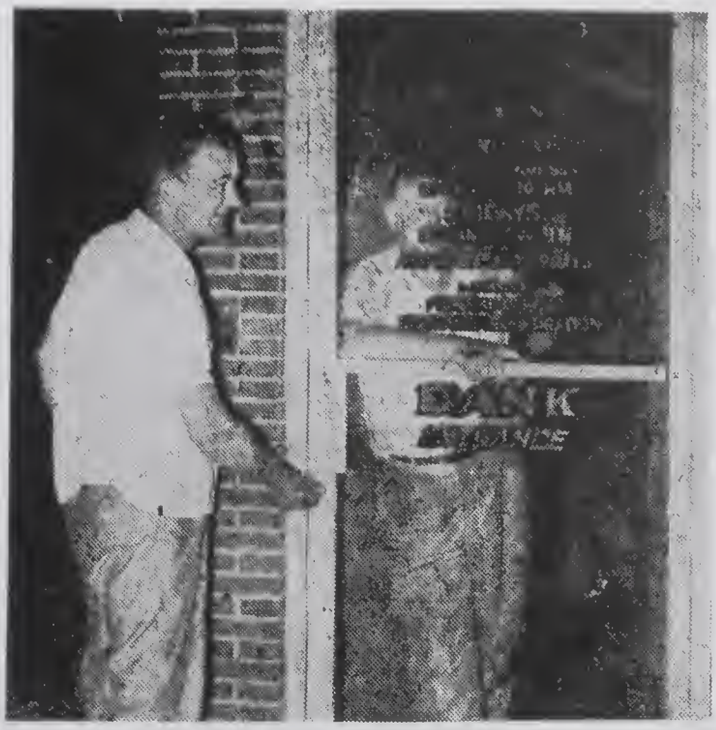
He started buying stamps by the sheet in the 1940s, putting them aside with the hope of making money over time. It turned out to be a terrible investment. After keeping them for years and years, they weren't worth much more than what he had paid for them.

One day Earl showed up at a meeting of the Anthony Wayne Stamp Society with some stamps that caught everyone's attention. Some fifteen years earlier he had lost 60 sheets of commemorative stamps somewhere in his house. Then one afternoon, while rummaging through his attic, he came across a brown envelope with a board in it. Wondering why he had stored a board in an envelope, he opened it to find his long lost stamps. The heat and cold of 15 summers and winters welded the 60 sheets into a stiff, solid mass.

The story hit the local paper and Earl became the talk of the town. Many people wrote in to help Earl figure out how to separate the stamps. The challenge was to get the glue to stay on the right side. Suggestions poured in, ranging from ironing them apart to fumigating them with various solvents. In the end Earl sold the board as-is to another collector.

Earl was one of those fellows that things would just happen to. He gained more notoriety another day after attending a stamp club meeting at Fort Wayne National Bank. Before leaving, he decided to look through his safety deposit box where he kept his plate blocks of stamps. He took his time in the private viewing room, as was his nature, and ended up being locked in the bank.

After making several calls from inside, he eventually reached the bank president. The president tried to persuade Earl to sleep on one of the benches in the bank because the whole building was wired. But Earl wouldn't have it. The photo below, entitled "Operation After Hours," made the front page of the paper. It shows the assistant vice president unlocking the door to let Earl out.



Earl Fankhauser being let out of the bank.

Another newspaper article told the story of how one afternoon Earl's wife helped him into the wrong tan gabardine coat as they were leaving an event at the YMCA. By the time Earl got to their car he discovered the error. They rushed back to find his coat gone. They left their name at the desk and went home with the wrong coat.

XX-ANY-YS-10

The next day a man returned to the Y with the wrong coat. He was sent to Earl's house only to find the coat Earl had was not his either, nor did he have Earl's. The newspaper went on to say yet another coat with the same label was hanging unclaimed at the Y at the time the article was being written. The article closed by saying, "So there are at least four topcoats involved in the switcheroo. Fankhauser is still optimistic about getting his coat back. It had a lucky coin bearing his name in the pocket."

Earl was a fount of wise expressions, which he often repeated for the benefit of family members. He would spout such sayings as "A penny saved is a penny earned," or "Don't put off until tomorrow what you can do today."

Earl had quite a sense of humor and loved to tell jokes. He was famous for his short, one-liners. He could always think of some quip to get people laughing. Often he would answer the phone with something offbeat, like "County Jail" or "Joe's Bar." He loved to tease people and play practical jokes. There was never a dull moment when Earl was around.

Earl's youngest brother is named Bill. At least that is what his parents meant to call him. But Earl decided to call him "Pete" (no one remembers why anymore). Pretty soon everyone in the family came to know him as Pete, and still do to this day.

When Bill -- or Pete -- was still living in Fort Wayne, he had a friend who was interested in coins. This fellow eventually met up with Earl and even bought some coins from him. Recognizing the last name, the man asked Earl if he was any relation to Bill. Earl said, "No, I know a Pete Fankhauser, but no Bill." The two brothers played the joke to the hilt, and it was years before the man ever knew there was a connection.

Earl had a large collection of paper money that included two uncut sheets of one dollar bills. Most people at that time had never seen an uncut sheet of bills. Earl enjoyed telling everyone he had been offered a Cadillac for the rarer of the two sheets, but turned it down.

One day Earl noticed there was a policeman he had not seen before out on the street. He knew most of the members of the police department, and quickly concluded the fellow was a rookie. For fun, Earl brought out one of his sheets of uncut bills and began to examine it where he was sure the new officer would notice. The new officer did notice, and immediately began to question Earl about it. Not getting a comfortable feeling from Earl, the young officer called in a police cruiser to bring Earl downtown for further questioning.

After a few phone calls to local coin dealers and many apologies from the policeman, Earl insisted they give him a ride back home. Earl got a big kick out of being dropped off at his house in a police car, but Audrie thought it was terrible.

For a while Earl put one of his sheets of bills on display at The Hobby House restaurant. There, too, it drew a lot of attention. The local paper published an article about it, explaining to people how Earl had written to the director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to get it.

IN-FWA-HO-10-A

Earl delighted in the give-and-take of negotiating. He always had to feel he got a bargain, or he would not buy. It did not matter to him whether an agreement was reached, so long as he had a good time at it. He never accepted anyone's first price. His friends in the coin business quickly figured him out, and left themselves plenty of negotiating room. Likewise on the selling end, he was a tough negotiator. Earl had several desirable pieces of paper money and some good coins to sell, but he wanted top dollar for them.

He liked proof sets, and bought many them every year for resale through Coin World newspaper. They were a favorite gift to family members and friends at Christmas. One year he had several proof sets sealed in plastic, which he gave away as gifts.

Living a rather public life with encased coins and coin collecting had its consequences. Earl was always afraid of being robbed. His children remember that whenever they went on vacations, the family kept their plans a secret until they returned. They felt they had to sneak away, not telling anyone where they were going or when they would be back.

Earl was one of the founding members of the Old Fort Coin Club in Fort Wayne. The club started up in 1956. Earl served as Program Chairman in 1958 and as Vice President in 1959. He was also a charter member of two other organizations. Fankhauser joined the Token and Medal Society (TAMS) at the outset in 1960, and had membership number eight. He was also charter member number fourteen of The Elongated Collectors (TEC), founded in 1966.

LATTER DAYS

In 1957 Earl was struck with a very severe case of the shingles. He was 55 years old and had hardly been sick a day in his life. Afterward, he was never completely well again. The disease kept Earl out of work at Wayne Pump for nearly a year. He recovered enough to go back into work for a few weeks and then retire early.

There was a little mix-up when he left Wayne Pump. Earl told them he was quitting, and nearly lost his pension. The mistake was later corrected and Wayne Pump let him leave with a normal retirement package.

Retirement gave Earl more time to pursue his hobbies, and he kept busy traveling throughout the country. He and Audrie enjoyed riding the train to major coin shows in the Midwest and visiting various Lincoln historical sites. When traveling by car, he liked stopping at businesses along the way to try to get more lucky penny orders. He also enjoyed visiting the banks to see what coins they had.

The Fankhauser's home from 1959 to 1980, at 3923 South Clinton Avenue.

Then in 1960 Earl developed Parkinson's disease. This slowed him down considerably. Over the next several years the shaking gradually became worse until eventually he had to give up going to coin shows.

IN-FWA-FA-54, the last piece Earl Fankhauser had made for himself.

Earl quit selling encased coins in 1965. That year he only took eight orders. He ended the way he began, with a piece made for himself. He had his last piece made with the "new" postal zip code on it.

Technological advances in the 1960s impacted the advertising novelty business in a big way, and encased coins were among the casualties. The Bic Pen Company developed an inexpensive ball point pen, an instant advertising marvel. Of even greater significance, printed advertising material of all sorts became much more affordable with the introduction of off-set photo lithography. Printers no longer had to hand set every letter, significantly reducing the labor involved.

The whole tone and culture of the United States was changing as well. In the age of long hair and psychedelic rock music, encased coins were not "hip." By the end of the decade, encased coin advertising pieces went the way of fins on cars, malt shops, and gas guzzlers.

Parkinson's disease affected Earl so strongly that he was not the same man. One local coin dealer who first met Earl in the mid-1970s described him as mild and easy going, not aggressive at all! Friends from the stamp club nicknamed him "Old Shaky."

Earl kept his sense of humor and mischief though, in spite of his failing health. His grandchildren remember being rewarded generously for learning to say the alphabet backwards as fast as they could forwards and for doing other fun things. He also compensated them for trying new foods and for eating prunes. Like many of his generation, Earl believed good health was intricately linked to the bowels.

Earl was happiest when he had one of his grandchildren in his lap. He loved to tickle kids and get them laughing. Family members remember how his whole face would light up when they brought over one of the little ones.

Even when Earl and Audrie were hardly able to get around themselves, they continued to visit shut-ins whenever they could. Audrie eventually became bedridden herself with cancer, and passed away in September of 1981.

Then in 1983, while Earl was on his deathbed in a nursing home, the thing he feared most happened. Someone broke into their home and stole his entire collection of gold pieces and other coins. None of it was ever recovered. The family never told him. On 14 June 1983, this colorful man passed away quietly. He died of pneumonia and was buried three days later on June 17, the fifty-ninth anniversary of his wedding to Audrie.

HOW ENCASED COINS WERE MADE

The manufacturing process for an encased coin started off with the making of a simple die from a piece of soft steel turned in a lathe. The lettering was then hammered or milled into the steel. Once the inscription was complete, the die would be hardened and then polished.

For decades the Osborne Coinage Company used a set of letter punches to hammer the customer's inscription into the die blank one letter at a time. Then in the early 1960s they bought a pantograph engraving machine to mill the lettering into the dies. To use the engraving machine, the engraver first assembled a master pattern of the customer's inscription. Then he traced each letter in the master pattern with one end of the engraving machine, while the other end cut the letters into the die blank.

A blank aluminum ring and slug.

Next, blank aluminum rings were punched from a coil of strip aluminum. Customers occasionally sent in their own coins for encasing, or made special arrangements with the bank. Sometimes these special coins required a different size hole in the aluminum ring. Non-standard holes had to be hand-punched in a second operation.

The aluminum rings were then cleaned and delivered to the coining press. The hardened dies were loaded into the press, and the operator would prepare the setup.

Each encased coin had to be made by hand, one at a time. The operator loaded an aluminum ring into the press and then inserted the coin, being careful to align it properly by eye. He then engaged the press, unloaded the completed piece and began again. As the press cycled, the bottom die pushed up to free the completed encased coin. The completed pieces were then sent through another wash operation and sometimes were given a protective lacquer coating.

A mis-aligned cent in IN-BGR-10-B.

Occasionally the operator might not place the coin all the way into the hole in the aluminum ring and the press would mash the coin into the aluminum, leaving a gap on one side. A defect of this magnitude is scarce, since the pressure of the press tended to align the coin if it was close to being in position.

A clipped planchet on CA-LAN-HO-12.

Sometimes in the process of punching out the aluminum rings, the aluminum strip did not feed properly through the press. The die would then line up slightly over the last punching, resulting in a "clipped planchet." Clipped planchets are hard to find in encased coins, since the operators were essentially hand-inspecting each ring as they loaded it.

A de-layered cent in IN-FWA-MO-10.

The coins themselves occasionally had impurities. Some cents de-layered under the pressure of being clenched, forming lines across the coin. This type of defect is a little easier to find, but still fairly unusual.

A cent with much of its design "sucked" away in IN-FWA-CO-30.

The forces exerted on the coin sometimes caused unusual flows of the metal in the coin. Here is an example of a cent with part of the design "sucked" away. Notice that much of the words "ONE CENT" and other design details are missing. Pieces like this are difficult to find, and for whatever reason seem to have occurred only with the SR4 style reverse.

IN-FWA-SO-30, with rings stamped into the cent.

Sometimes the person who made the die did not cut in a deep enough relief for the coin. As a result, the coin in the middle would be flattened by the die. One interesting example of this is IN-FWA-SO-30, which has a pattern of rings stamped into the cent. The entire run was made with the defect.

Coins that have been broken out of encasements have an unusual look about them. In the clenching process, the diameter of the coin is reduced and the edges become concave. Sometimes the coins buckled. These odd looking coins occasionally confound coin collectors who find them in circulation.

The obverse and reverse of an encased Canadian cent in ON-PRI-GO-10-B.

Customers who wanted Canadian cents in their encasements usually ordered most of their pieces with Lincoln cents. The reverse of Canadian cents are not rotated 180 degrees like Lincoln cents. The press operator typically made his setup using the Lincoln cents first, and would not bother to re-orient the dies when switching over to Canadian cents. As a result, one side of the Canadian cent usually appears to be upside down in the encasement.

The obverse and reverse of a piece punched for a key chain at the factory (IN-FWA-BL-10).

Some customers paid extra to have their pieces made into key rings. It is important to know whether the hole in your piece was done at the factory or added later by some individual. Holes added later are considered damage, greatly reducing the value of the piece. It is easy to tell the difference. Holes done at the factory usually are made through the clover, and the inscription is shifted to either side of the hole. Holes added later are not usually as "clean" as holes done at the factory, and they typically go through some part of the horseshoe or the inscription. Holes added at the factory are described in the Catalog with the note "this piece is punched for key chain."

EARL'S LUCKY PENNIES

Many of Earl's pieces from the Fort Wayne area have strange numbers on them, like E4863 and A58201. They are telephone numbers. Telephone numbers like these were used in Fort Wayne until May 1963, when today's seven digit numbers were introduced. Then a phone number that had been H5474 became 744-5474, for example, as seen on the IN-FWA-AC-20 piece below.

IN-FWA-AC-20, illustrating the phone number changeover in Fort Wayne.

The letter preceding the telephone number indicated the exchange. "A" was for Anthony, "E" for Eastbrook, "H" for Harrison, "K" for Kenmore, "S" for Sherwood, "T" for Trinity, and "W" for New Haven (Windsor), a suburb of Fort Wayne. New Haven phone numbers did not have the "W" prefix before 1959, when they were listed separately in the Fort Wayne phone book. In Fort Wayne, four digit numbers were issued for business and private lines. Five digit numbers were issued for party lines.

On some pieces, numbers appear after the name of a city, such as "Fort Wayne 1" or "Boston 20." Many cities used numbers like these to indicate the mail route or postal zone, an early kind of zip code.

An error in the phone number that was later corrected (IN-FWA-SU-30 and -32).

Given the numerous pieces Earl had made, it is not surprising mistakes were made, either by Earl or at Osborne. Someone had difficulty with the phone number in the pieces above. "E5244" is correct. There are several other pieces in the Catalog with similar transpositions and misspellings. The errors are pointed out in the notes in the Catalog.

Of the 535 different pieces Earl sold after 1954, all but four have his name on them. These four unsigned pieces are attributed to Earl because 1) they were in his personal collection, 2) they were made using a reverse die typical of his pieces, and 3) in all but one case they were made for repeat customers. Encased coins made after 1954 that do not have Earl's name on them are most likely not Fankhauser pieces.

There are 104 pieces made before 1955 without Earl's name on them that have been attributed to Earl. These pieces were produced before Earl began "signing" his pieces. They have been attributed to Earl because 1) they were found in his personal collection, and 2) they were made using a reverse die typical of his pieces.

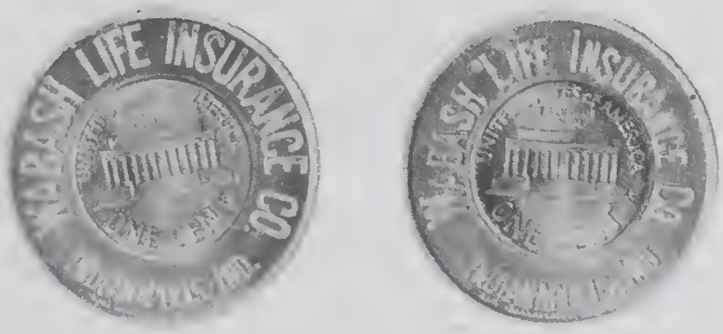
Unfortunately, Earl did not keep an example of every piece he had made. Nor did he keep any records. There are probably other unsigned pieces Earl sold before 1955, but it is not possible to know for sure which ones they are. Without knowing for certain, the author elected not to include any possible candidates.

CATALOG FORMAT

This Catalog of Earl Fankhauser's encased coins is the result of six years of research, incorporating information from numerous collectors across the United States. The greatest portion of Earl's work is captured here, although publication will likely surface additional pieces.

DOCUMENTATION

In documenting the inscription, a single slash (/) is used to indicate the end of each line of type on the same side of the coin. A double slash (//) is used to separate lines of type on opposite sides of the coin.



Two pieces with near-identical wording, but different die work (IN-IND-WA-10 and -14).

All commas, periods, and dashes are documented to help distinguish between pieces. Sometimes a period or comma might be the only difference discernible from the wording of the inscription. Yet when the pieces are viewed side-by-side, the differences in the way the inscriptions are laid out may be very obvious.

Differences in the size of letters is not indicated, except when the difference occurred within a single line of type. Then, upper and lower case letters indicate the different sizes, such as "McKNIGHT," "your PENNY man," or "BERman."

The notes in the Catalog highlight distinctive features about a piece, cross-reference related pieces, list known dates of circulated coins encased in some issues, and give historical facts. They also describe the rotation of the reverse relative to the front when it is important or unusual, indicate when a piece was made with a hole for a key chain, and tell the denomination and country of origin of the coin inside when it is not a U.S. cent.

XX-ANY-CI-10-B, with the coin facing the obverse.

The "obverse" of a coin is the side that has the features of greatest interest to a collector. The "obverse" of an encased coin is the side with the inscription. The "reverse" is the side with the good luck phrase and horseshoe.

Most encased coins have the portrait side of the coin facing toward the reverse, toward the horseshoe. However eight of Earl's pieces were made with the portrait facing the obverse, toward the inscription. They are pointed out in the notes with the remark "the coin faces the obverse."

NUMBERING SYSTEM

The numbering system used here was developed from the inputs of numerous collectors and dealers. It was selected by them over several alternatives as being the best, primarily for its legibility. It was designed with ease of interpretation and future expandability in mind. This system might be useful for cataloging other encased pieces as well. A sample catalog number is given below for discussion.

IN-WOL-BO-10

IN-WOL-BO-10:

ROBERT BOLLINGER / YOUR POPCORN MAN // WOLCOTTVILLE / INDIANA

The first two digits (IN) represent the state. The current postal abbreviations are used. "ON" is used for Ontario, and "QU" for Quebec. Canadian listings appear after the U.S. listings in the Catalog.

The next three digits (WOL) abbreviate the town. Unlike other cataloging systems that assign a three digit number to each town, three significant alpha characters are used. The alpha characters take up the same amount of space and are easier to translate and memorize. Here "WOL" abbreviates Wolcottville. In the event a piece gives two towns in its inscription, the first town is used (for example see IN-FWA-RE-20).

The next two digits (BO) are the first two letters of the subject of the piece, as it would appear listed in a phone book. In the above example the letters "BO" are used, since you would look up Robert Bollinger by his last name. The subject of each piece is shown in a separate column in the Catalog for easy scanning.

Judgment may be required when determining the subject of a piece. Some pieces have two or more possible subjects, such as a person's name and the name of a business. In these cases, the name of the larger institution is used. For example, the catalog number for: ED CHAMBERS // YOUR FORD MAN / ALLEN COUNTY MOTORS is IN-FWA-AL-24, keying off of Allen County Motors, not Ed Chambers.

The last two digits (10) are numbers used to distinguish between pieces. The numbers were assigned beginning with 10, and increment by 10 to allow for future insertions. However, when the same subject had several different pieces made, the numbers increment by just two in order to conserve numbers.

Whenever a piece was made using several different coins during the same production run, an additional alpha digit (-A) is added to the end of the catalog number for each coin used. For example, the two Gold Leaf Tobacco pieces ON-PRI-GO-10-A and -B are identical, except the -A piece has a 1963D U.S. cent inside, and the -B piece has a 1959 Canadian cent. Pieces containing coins from different countries are sequenced starting with the U.S. coins first, and then alphabetically by country (see the CA-LME-RO-10-A through -H series). The extra alpha character is a clear and simple indicator of whether similar pieces were made during the same production run.

A new catalog number is assigned whenever two pieces were not made during the same production run. Pieces from the same production run exhibit the following characteristics:

1) the obverses are identical
2) the reverses are also identical
3) the rotation of the obverse relative to the reverse is identical

The rotation is easily checked by flipping the piece over and noting the position of the clover relative to the letters in the inscription.

An example of three pieces that at first glimpse appear to have been made in the same production run are IN-FWA-FA-28, -32, and -48. All three were made using the same obverse and reverse dies. However, the -28 piece has the clover aligned between the E and N of "your PENNY man," and has a significant die scratch below the clover. It was made in 1958. The -32 piece has the clover aligned with the first N in PENNY, and the die scratch is still present. It was made in 1959. The -48 piece is aligned like the -32 piece, but after four years of use the die scratch below the clover was polished away. It was made in 1963.

When circulated coins were used, only one catalog number is assigned to cover all the dates, since there may have been many different dates involved. In these cases, "CIRC" appears in the DATE column. "CIRC" pieces are cataloged last in date sequence, and all known dates are listed in the notes.

"Mavericks" are pieces that do not give the state or town in their inscription. Most of Earl's maverick pieces have been attributed using city directories and phone books of the time. Where the missing town or state has been identified, they appear in parenthesis in the catalog number. Mavericks that have not yet been attributed have XX-XXX- in the state and town fields of the catalog number. The unattributed mavericks appear at the end of the Catalog.

Pieces of a general nature that could have been made for any town or state, such as for Alcoholics Anonymous or the Eisenhower campaign, are cataloged as XX-ANY- (although Earl probably made them for the Fort Wayne area). The XX-ANY- pieces appear just before the unattributed mavericks, at the end of the Catalog.

For easy scanning, the Catalog also shows the TOPIC of each piece, indicating the type of business or field each piece pertains to. Where the topic is not apparent from the wording on the piece, it is in parenthesis. The best guess of the YEAR MADE is also listed for easy scanning and reference.

Appendix A lists the different topics that appear in the Catalog and gives the number of different pieces they pertain to. It points out how diverse the population was that Earl sold to, and shows what areas he concentrated in, such as coin and automobile businesses.

Appendix B shows the different reverses used on Earl's pieces. Each reverse is pictured and assigned a number for reference in the Catalog. Dates of usage and the number of different pieces having that reverse are also given.

Appendix C lists the different versions of Earl's "signature" that appear on his pieces. Because each tiny letter of Earl's name and address had to be hand-stamped into the die one letter at a time, each signature is unique. It is quite interesting to look at them under a magnifying glass. Close examination reveals many glaring examples of double struck and rotated letters. Numerous errors and misspellings occurred. Each letter combination is assigned a number for reference in the Catalog.

Appendix D contains a special listing of the maverick pieces, sorted by the wording of the inscription and giving the catalog number. This listing makes it considerably easier to determine what city and state an attributed maverick piece is from, and to locate the piece in the Catalog.

VALUE

Collectors look for six features in a piece that make it more attractive. Each of these is discussed below.

1) CITY and STATE While we may know where a piece came from through research, most dealers and collectors agree that having the city and state printed right on the encasement makes a big difference in the appeal of a piece. Having at least the city is good, and having them both is even better. Some states are more desirable than others, depending upon among other things how many people collect tokens and medals (exonumia) from that state. For example, items from Hawaii and Alaska are very popular.

2) TOPIC Inscriptions that give an idea what type of business or field the piece pertains to are more interesting than inscriptions that just give a person's name and address. Some topics have much greater appeal than others. For example, pieces that say the name of a car company, such as "Ford" or "Chevrolet," are more collectable. Some topics have broad public interest, such as The Boy Scouts, or John F. Kennedy. Some pieces are more appealing because of their interesting wording, such as "IF YOU CAN'T MAKE BOTH ENDS MEAT, MAKE ONE FISH" or "THE OLD CHEESE MAN."

3) COIN The coin inside is important. Wheat cents are more desirable than a Lincoln Memorial cents, since wheat cents are older and have vanished from circulation today. Nickels and dimes are much more desirable, as are foreign coins. Panamanian centesimos are scarcer than Canadian cents, and Belgian 2 franc pieces are especially scarce.

4) ENCASEMENT Coins were put in encasements of many different sizes, shapes and styles. The most common is the 32 millimeter round encasement with the "KEEP ME AND NEVER GO BROKE" wording and a four leaf clover at the bottom. Most collectors find pieces with other wording and styles more interesting, such as without the clover, or saying "KEEP ME AND YOU WILL HAVE GOOD LUCK." The larger 35 millimeter round encasements are more desirable, and horseshoe shapes are very desirable.

5) AGE The older the better, particularly changing decades.

6) CONDITION Encased coins are not as sensitive to minute differences in condition as in numismatics, where a small amount of wear or abrasion can have a big impact on the value. However, pieces without wear or corrosion are much more desirable than those that have seen a lot of use. Pieces containing coins still shiny with mint luster are especially attractive.

Along with a piece's attractiveness, collectors also care a great deal about RARITY. As discussed previously, no record exists of the quantities minted. Even without specific figures, the market has established that most encased coins from the 1950s and later, including Fankhauser's, are fairly common compared to encased coins from the first half of the century, and has priced them inexpensively.

The appeal of each piece was evaluated based upon the number of desirable features it exhibited. From this a value was established for each piece, centering on the average of the current market. The values listed here average approximately $2.50 for pieces containing U.S. cents, which is reflective of prices being realized today for Fankhauser encased coins in mail bid auctions.

Ultimately, supply and demand are what determine the price of an item. Supply and demand vary from place to place. Coin dealers that specialize in tokens and medals access the greater market for encased coins, and therefore can command higher prices. On the other hand, some coin dealers don't want to fool with exonumia, and you can find real bargains in their "junk" boxes. But if you are looking for a particular item, you may need help from your exonumia dealer to find it, and sometimes even they have difficulty.

In the end, opinions are like noses -- everyone has one, and each is slightly different. Therefore, what is presented here is simply a guide. The values listed assume the piece is bought from a knowledgeable dealer, and the piece is in good condition.

The tremendous variety of encased coins Earl Fankhauser sold during his lifetime has provided collectors with a wealth of pieces to search for and enjoy. Happy hunting!

Like many dealers, Harvey Rose was primarily a collector who took up buying and selling to expand his collection. In the late 1950s he put together an exhibit of foreign coins, and was immediately thought to be an expert. Inspired by the presumptive prodding of other collectors, he actually went on to become one, winning several honors for his knowledge and involvement in the hobby, including a presentation piece of the Thatcher Ferry Bridge medal. He became disenchanted with U.S. coins in the early 1960s when the Lincoln cent die crack craze hit, and sold all his U.S. inventory to his son. He went entirely into foreign coins, especially coins of Panama and Mexico. Many of the photographs in the first edition of Krause's book on world coins were of his collection.

DC-WAS-AD-10	1952	D	E. ROSS ADAIR // SOUVENIR / WASHINGTON, D.C.

Adair was the U.S. Congressman for Fort Wayne, Indiana from 1950-1970. He and Orvas E. Beers were partners in a law firm in Fort Wayne (see IN-FWA-BE-20). Six years after Adair stepped down, the congressional seat went to young Dan Quayle, who went on to become a U.S. Senator in 1980, and then Vice President of the United States in 1989 under George Bush. The seat was the focus of national attention in 1994 when Mark Souder defeated Jill Long, an early indication of the change that was about to take place in the House of Representatives. Ken Hallenbeck remembers the Adair's house as GREAT place for his children to hit on Halloween!

ANGOLA, INDIANA

(IN)-(ANG)-BU-10	1958	D	ETHEL CONWAY // BUCK LAKE RANCH
$1.75	13	SR8	(RESORTS)	1958	BUCK LAKE RANCH

The Buck Lake Ranch was founded in the 1940s as an entertainment center, featuring stars like The Three Stooges and Mickey Rooney. Through several changes in ownership it expanded into a family resort, with a 55-acre campground around a 25-acre lake, kiddy rides, food vendors, souvenirs, and arcade games in a thirteen building complex. The bowl-shaped outdoor stage seated 3,000 people. It was hailed as the "Nashville of the North." Newspaper ads in the 1958 Journal Gazette boasted the "biggest and best live entertainment in the midwest." Every Sunday they put on three shows featuring big name entertainers. In 1958 they had Johnny Cash, Connie Francis, Homer and Jethro, several Grand Ole Opry stars, and many more. Admission to the show was just 75 cents. They also offered brook and rainbow trout fishing (pay for what you catch), a roller coaster ride, fireworks, and every Friday night a record hop with WOWO radio for just 50 cents. The Conways ran a food concession here, and also had two other encased cents made (see IN-FWA-CO-50 and 52).

To accommodate them, 38 alleys were constructed in the Allen County War Memorial Coliseum. The alleys took 75,000 lineal feet of maple and 80,000 lineal feet of pine to build. Afterward they were taken down and sold. The Komets had to finish the rest of their hockey season elsewhere, and the high school basketball tournament was moved. The event lasted 72 days, from March to June. See also IN-FWA-OA-12.

They started up each year in May with Sunday afternoon races, then went to Tuesday and Saturday nights in the summer, then back to Sunday afternoons in the late fall. Once it was paved, drivers came from all over the country to race super-modified stock cars there. Super-modifieds have no fenders and were the fastest cars of their day. The South Anthony was the only track in the tri-state area where you could race them. When the track was sold, it was moved almost as-is to Avilla, Indiana and is now the Avilla Raceway.

This shop is owned by Allen Karn. This was the first of four encased cents Karn had made. Karn purchased the others after Fankhauser stopped taking orders, including two 35mm round pieces in 1968 and 1978, and a horseshoe in 1974. Karn does not believe in business cards. He remembers back in the 1970s hiring a man who had kept one of Fankhauser's pieces in his pocket since Karn gave it to him 12 years earlier. Karn said it was practically smooth. The man carried it until he died in 1976. Karn has been a long-time supporter of numismatics, serving the hobby for many years among other things as a Central States Numismatic Association governor. His shop is now located at 1243 West Broad Street in Westerville.
